In Hawkins, the weather was nice and hot as summer was already here in the village. In July, Steve had approached Hargrove since the events with the monster and the Russians in Hawkins. Brown was often of a clumsy and amusing nature according to Erica Sinclair. He was rejected by all the high school seniors and even by teenage girls. It was clear to Harrington, he wasn't as popular as he used to be since the Californian arrived in town.

Behind him was Hargrove, who had been waiting for ages for his share of pizza for him and his half-sister: Max Mayfield. The blond man's cold, hoarse voice made the brown one startle and turn slightly towards him, embarrassed.

-What? Hargrove? replied Steve, clumsily.

-I've been waiting for hours, by the way, Harrington!

-Me too, it's not just you who wants this pizza!

-I still want to kick your ass, you know that?

The blond man's tone became more scratched and Steve frowned.

-What? Why don't you hit me right here and now? Hargrove?

-Because there are children, you idiot. Do you often play dumb or what?

-You annoy me, the Californian who came out of nowhere! complained Steve.

Billy frowned until Jonathan Byers intervened.

-That's enough, you two! We can hear you all the way to the end of the room!

-What are you meddling with Byers about?" replied the blond man, clenching his left fist.

-You're just a poor bastard, Hargrove. How can we appreciate you if you don't change? Steve replied, taking his pizza for his group of friends who were waiting impatiently for him.

The blond could not respond to the anger of the brunette who left without paying attention to him and Jonathan looked up at the while Nancy spoke to the duo.

-The boys,

-This is not the time, Nancy! replied the two concerned, sulking.

-Is Hargrove bothering you again?

-It's not your problem," his ex mumbled.

-Puppy!" started Dustin, "He's a real jerk, your brother, Max!

-Yeah, I know... I have to go, unfortunately... Good pizza party at all!

-Thank you, Max," replied all in chorus.

They smiled, but they all noticed disappointment in the eyes of the redhead.
